A Word from OUR CEO

Dear Friends,

We hope you will enjoy a trip through this 2022 report. It's a dual undertaking in the 'what' and the 'why' of Great Hearts: to summarize our continuing growth and action as an organization, and to re-state our intents and purposes and the reasons we exist. We offer both in gratitude to all with an interest in our success. We are deeply grateful to each of you, as we carry out this work every day with the joy and confidence your support provides.

That work is inspired by a heightened vision for the future, but here in the present it takes place firmly on the ground. There is no "room where it happens," but rather hundreds of them, classrooms to be precise, in an increasing number of communities. Creation of dozens or hundreds of excellent schools is a challenge: to summon the love and determination that will sustain them over time is a greater one.

If you doubt this, consider how few educational organizations have achieved it. It is operations-intensive and places high demand on both talent and virtue. In the present moment the broad educational status quo is widely known as failing, yet all educational enterprise to rival or disrupt that status quo faces significant threats and barriers to success. In a word, the mission is hard. Thus, as an organization we aspire and resort to the same kind of focus and discipline and wonder that our classical education model aims to instill in its 26,000 students. We do this because it is right, and because we hope it is smart. The truth is we also do it because we have no choice.

We have no choice, because after 20 years, the Classical ethos and school model Great Hearts set out to restore and put at the center of American education is now advancing with increasing speed to meet expanding demand. An inflection point has arrived. We are pleased to report that Great Hearts today has many imitators and travelers alongside, as Classical education is now its own movement within the broader education reform efforts gathering pace around the country. This is not political in nature and should not be considered as such. At times in other theaters, such as financial markets, this sort of thing has been called a "flight to quality." This movement must now be led to its fulfillment for the benefit of our communities, our nation, and generations of Americans yet unborn.

For the fact is that regardless of what one might call it, any education of transcendent value is Classical education, both in what it effects and what it rejects. It effects the moral as well as the intellectual and practical formation of the student – the elevation not only of what one knows, but what one loves. And it rejects conformity to the latest ideological fashions and academic fads. It equally rejects utilitarian notions of mere economics or fever dreams of power struggles as the core of human existence and thus the essence or purpose of a great education. A Classical education begins and succeeds by grounding faculty and students alike in the timeless things that do not change. It disabuses young minds from the common tendency to see one's own time as safely evolved beyond the perils and failures of earlier times. It refutes the cult of novelty. It opens the mind by engaging it in centuries of human thought, experience and conversation, disaster and triumph, error and recovery, insight and inspiration. It lifts up the heart through shared pursuit of Truth, Goodness, and Beauty – the only pursuit through which human beings can ever find lasting happiness, achieve great things, or even work out an ordered and joyful existence across the upsets and opportunities of a human lifetime.

Elsewhere in this report you will find "For Such A Time As This," a speech recently delivered at Oxford University in England by Jim Rahn—gentleman, scholar, grandfather, Great Hearts America board member, and head of the Kern Family Foundation—the most generous benefactor to Great Hearts in its history. There you will read lucid thoughts cast in interesting phrases, such as "moral ecology" and "cut flowers." You will also see there the assertion from Mr. Robert Kern, who has just recently left this Earth after 96 years of a faith-filled and highly consequential life (see also the worthy tribute herein, penned by Checker Finn of the Fordham Foundation). "If you are only working to solve problems you can accomplish in your lifetime," said Mr. Kern, "you are solving problems that are too small."

It is likely Moses (c. 1200 BC) would have endorsed that thought, as would Aristotle and Hippocrates (c. 350 BC), Cicero and Seneca (43 BC and 65 AD), Jesus of Nazareth, and Augustine (430 AD), Aquinas (1274 AD), and Teresa of Calcutta (1997 AD) after him. For we are all working to solve the same problems, really, each of our own mercies and means, from epoch to epoch and age to age.

Thank you for reviewing this report. Here's wishing every good and gracious thing to you and your families. May you find all joyful success in the future you strive to work out and the problems you are working to solve.

Sincerely,

JAY HEILER
CEO

OUR SCHOOLS

“I think the part that will forever stay in my heart is the connection between class and teachers. My class has such a strong bond with our teachers that made the learning process fun and a lot more interesting. Being able to bond with my classmates and my teachers is something I will never forget.”

AGAINST THE ODDS:

Public Charter School Tops the Chart on 2021-22 Academic Success

Great Hearts Lincoln is Arizona’s top-scoring K-8 school, according to data recently released by the Arizona State School Board. There were 1,342 others competing for that distinction.

Great Hearts Lincoln, like all public charter schools, enrolls any student who applies, provided a seat is available. There is no entrance exam, behavioral review, tuition, or fee. Public charter schools receive significantly less state funding than public district schools. Great Hearts Lincoln offers a rigorous classical liberal arts curriculum with challenging assignments and grading that reflects an uncompromising encouragement to pursue excellence.

How then, did Lincoln place first? There are many possible reasons, several of which are known to have contributed to the result. Lincoln families, though, are likely to agree that the number one reason is the school’s leadership, faculty, and staff.

At the helm of Great Hearts Lincoln is Dr. Toyin Atolagbe, a seasoned educator who was born and raised in Southwestern Nigeria, far from the Western world. Her parents embraced Western education and sought out a classical school for their children. Her first teaching job was at Central Christian School in Belize. It was a Title I school that served many children from the area’s lower socio-economic population.

“I developed humility and a genuine love of teaching during this experience,” said Dr. Atolagbe. “These children showed up daily with little or nothing, and the school ran efficiently with little or nothing. During the tough times now, the tenacity of those students and teachers reminds me to remain unbending in the face of trials and tribulations.”

Dr. Atolagbe attributes GreatHearts Lincoln’s superlative results to her entire faculty and staff, whose “steadfastness and genuine love for their students has brought the school this far,” she said.

She is grateful to her administrative team, including Assistant Headmaster Karen Marzulo, Dean of Academics Erin Stecker, and Dean of Students Glory Pabon. Dr. Atolagbe describes them as “a powerhouse of servant leaders whose indefatigable commitment helped cultivate a strong school culture of teamwork, accountability, and partnership with parents.”

Dr. Atolagbe also credits Lincoln families. “I love our parent community because they are also ‘bought in’ to the mission and go above and beyond to support our faculty and staff,” she said. “And of course, I adore our students and continue to be impressed by their kindness, hard work, and growth mindset.

“At the heart of our team is a genuine love for one another and an understanding that we can only achieve our collective goals by working together. So, with a good sense of our mission, we all show up daily with our hearts of service and unwavering commitment to instilling virtue in our children. We cultivate habits of excellence in them that enable them to flourish as human beings. We do this as a team and in partnership with our lovely parents, with everyone rowing in the same direction, for the good of our students.”

Jay Heiler, CEO of Great Hearts America, says Headmaster Atolagbe has been an inspiration since her arrival at Great Hearts. “Toyin’s contribution to Great Hearts is immeasurable. She embodies the ideals of her own Classical education – hard work, perseverance, courage, humility, and magnanimity. She inspires everyone around her.”

Dr. Atolagbe’s response to accolades never changes: she broadens the group to include others deserving of recognition. “There are many people throughout GreatHearts schools who work as hard or harder than I do, who love their scholars as much as I do, who pour their hearts into meeting each scholar’s needs and helping them develop a love of their classical education, and I believe this distinction for Lincoln belongs to each person who is contributing to the lives of any of our thousands of scholars,” she said. “This win is for all of them, including the executive team and all the staff at the head office who support us operationally, every day as we strive for excellence!”

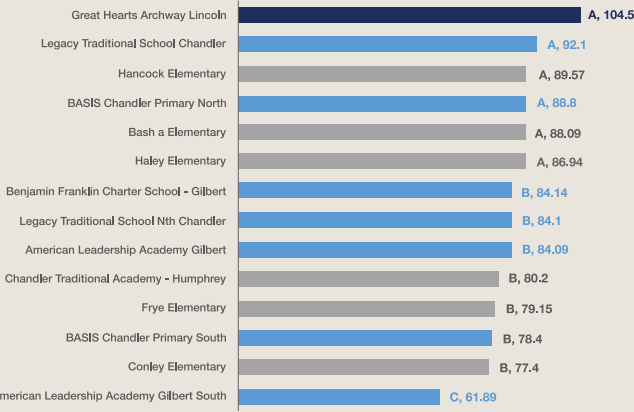

While Lincoln took the state’s top honors, several other GreatHearts Schools in Arizona experienced noteworthy successes in the 2021-22 school year. For example:

- Great Hearts Arizona is the highest performing Charter Management Organization in the state, receiving a strong A grade overall. 18/21 academies received As.
- Great Hearts Arizona also exceeded the performance of any public school district in metro Phoenix.
- Archway Chandler was the 10th highest performing K-8 school in the state.
- Among the “traditional hybrids” (i.e., K-12 or 6-12 schools), Veritas Prep did notably well as the 10th highest scoring in this category (totaling 96 schools).
- Archways Lincoln, Chandler, and Glendale received maximum proficiency points (i.e., raw academic performance), and Archway Lincoln also received maximum growth points (i.e. progress made by students from one year to the next) under the state’s formula for K-8 schools.
- Glendale Prep, Scottsdale Prep, Veritas Prep, Chandler Prep, and North Phoenix Prep received maximum proficiency points for 9-12 schools. Maryvale Prep, Glendale Prep, and Scottsdale Prep received maximum growth points for 9-12 schools.

When asked about the network’s success during a school year that had unprecedented challenges due largely to COVID-19, Heiler expressed his appreciation to Dr. Atolagbe and her colleagues across the GreatHearts network who kept their schools open so that students could continue in-person learning. While that approach was discouraged by some “experts” and agencies, it has since been vindicated by numerous studies of the school year’s outcomes that have shown keeping students in classrooms prevented significant losses of learning during the pandemic.

THE GREATHEARTS NETWORK includes 21 schools in Arizona, 11 schools in Texas, and Great Hearts Online - Arizona.

Celebrating Maryvale's INAUGURAL GRADUATING CLASS

MARYVALE
PREPARATORY ACADEMY

Ten years ago, Headmaster Mac Esau and other Great Hearts staff members went door-to-door throughout the Maryvale neighborhood to introduce the concept of a public charter school with a classical liberal arts education. The tight-knit community was skeptical.

With perseverance and hard work, 140 students enrolled in the first year, the exact number needed for the school to be economically viable.

Fast forward to today. In May of 2022, Maryvale Preparatory Academy graduated its first senior class. Twenty-seven of the twenty-seven students graduated and all were accepted to college. Of those, twenty-four are attending college this fall, two are taking a gap year, and one is enlisting in the military. Combined, the class was awarded $1,141,000 in scholarships.

GreatHearts® Online

OUR PURPOSE:

GH Online exists to create revolutionary and sustainable programs that serve students with the same steadfast purpose: to cultivate the hearts and minds of students in pursuit of truth, goodness, and beauty. GH Online provides an innovative experience for families seeking flexibility by transforming education through high-quality online offerings. Blending live class learning with independent offline work, GH Online ensures that students feel part of a larger community of students. And online-focused teachers build meaningful relationships with students and their families.

HOW IT WORKS:

With thoughtful data-informed instruction strategies, small reading groups, low student-to-teacher ratios, and opportunities for in-person gatherings, we ensure all students are learning and growing daily. To the parents of scholars with individualized education plans (IEPs), we provide weekly support and coaching in addition to student services.

TIMELINE | Our History

THE WHY The classical education movement has grown exponentially over the last 20 years with Great Hearts Academies leading the way. Where a generation ago the number of classical schools had become minuscule, today an estimated 400 private and charter schools educate approximately 600,000 students using a classical, liberal arts curriculum. It is also estimated that as many as 20 percent of America’s 2.3 million homeschooled students are classically educated. Increasingly, when parents are given the opportunity, they choose the classical approach.

Students who graduate from a Great Hearts Academy not only exceed their peers on standardized tests, they are also immersed in an educational environment that, by emphasizing Truth, Goodness, and Beauty, helps them become freer and more virtuous citizens. Given the dependence of political and economic freedom on individual character, making classical education more widely available and attractive is an important piece of both the broader education-reform puzzle and national renewal. Investing in classical education promises to yield a crucially important cultural return.

THE GOAL of the 501(c)(3) Great Hearts Foundation is to resource the mission to grow. By actively promoting the classical education model that has been proof-tested in the Great Hearts laboratory of over 41 schools and 26,000 scholars, philanthropic support of the Great Hearts Foundation will help dramatically improve the education received by hundreds of thousands of American students, advancing broader efforts for education reform and helping create a better America for all. The greatest obstacle to this achievement is financial resources. Only through continued support and new transformational philanthropic partners will this grand vision become a reality.

YOU MAKE the Difference

THE IMPACT When you give to the Great Hearts Foundation, you’re making a transformational impact on our future. Your gifts provide the financial fuel for the mission of Great Hearts Academies to cultivate the minds and hearts of young men and women in the pursuit of Truth, Goodness, and Beauty.

Your support impacts the next generation of Great Hearts scholars and educators, creating opportunities that go far beyond what public funding can cover.

Gifts to the Foundation are tax-deductible and provide:

- Startup funding for new regional market expansion and mission growth
- Capital funds for campus improvement projects and new bricks-and-mortar expansion
- Support for philanthropic priorities such as advancing institutional systems, marketing resources
- Emergency grants to members in extreme need
- Grants to Great Hearts Academies for leadership and curriculum development
- Support services for Title 1 and Free and Reduced Lunch where at risk student communities are served
- Event sponsorship for mission advancement

OUR MISSION:

Drawing upon ancient wisdom, contemporary scholarship, and nearly two decades of experience at Great Hearts Academies, Great Hearts Institute is renewing the tradition of classical education by directly supporting educators, school leaders, and families.

The Institute's mission is to provide the best in professional development resources and community-building to the K-12 classical movement and to build a vibrant future for liberal arts education in North America.

INSTITUTE ACTIVITIES:

- The National Symposium for Classical Education, an annual forum for the classical movement at large, featuring the finest research and training the movement has to offer.
- VIRTUE, a free quarterly magazine with dispatches from the cutting edge of the classical renaissance.
- The VIRTUE Podcast, providing insider access to enriching conversations among the leaders of the K-12 classical movement.
- Exceptional scholarly articles and talks from Advisors, Fellows, and Symposium presenters.
- A regular blog, including book reviews, teacher interviews, scholarly insights, and more.

In Memory of ROBERT KERN

BY CHECKER FINN

This piece was originally published by the Thomas B. Fordham Institute and is included here with the Institute's permission.

We mourn the passing of Robert D. Kern at 96, even as we recall some of the great good he did—and our encounters with him.

“Mister Kern,” as everyone but family members always addressed him, could be formidable. He was plain-spoken, tough-minded, and far more interested in facts than theories. His own long career as a highly successful engineer and businessman no doubt inclined him in that direction. So did his solid midwestern roots.

He was the opposite of fancy. Grantees and grant-seekers summoned, as we sometimes were, to present their case (or findings) to him—and, until five years ago, to Pat (Mrs.!) Kern, his charming and exceptionally keen wife of 69 years—were housed overnight on the Foundation's expansive but unpretentious grounds in comfortable but plain quarters and often then treated to a tasty but no-nonsense lunch in his presence. (We seem to remember spaghetti.)

He was always gentlemanly, if occasionally brusque, but his questions were tough and basic. What were we think-tankers and policy wonks doing, or hoping to do, that would strengthen America—strengthen people's character, their faith, their patriotism, their infrastructure? What was our evidence? Why should he invest in this? What real good would come of it?

The Kerns were pillars of their community, employers of exceptionally loyal and able staffers—but did they ever have to perform!—and leaders of a classic, nay paradigmatic, “family foundation.” It wasn't just named for them. It embodied and extended their family values, and we have absolutely no doubt that it will continue to.

As Bob and Pat Kern had built Generac over decades of hard work, their Kern Family Foundation quietly built strong and durable relationships with key institutions, ranging from the Medical College of Wisconsin to the University of Virginia's Institute for Advanced Studies in Culture. The “Kern Entrepreneurial Engineering Network” operates in many universities. They also made innumerable project-specific grants.

But don't look to the Kerns for vague “general-support” type grants! Their support was always skillfully targeted and closely monitored. Grantees must advance the Foundation's mission, which is to “Empower the rising generation of Americans to build flourishing lives anchored in strong character, driven by an entrepreneurial mindset, and guided by the desire to create value for others.”

Talk about traditional midwestern values!

Many groups have been grateful recipients of support from the Kern Family Foundation. But the foundation didn't always say yes when asked. Plans had to align with that clearly-stated mission—and almost always, Bob Kern had to be convinced, in person, that it was really going to do some good in ways that mattered to him and Pat. We could also be sure that the Foundation staff would check to see if we really delivered—and if it really did some good.

Yes, we had palpitations in advance of the spaghetti and sometimes afterwards as well. But those polite-but-tough sessions were good for us. And Mister Kern was good for America and for those who come after him. May he rest in peace. We and many others will miss him even as we're grateful for his life, his work, and his legacy.

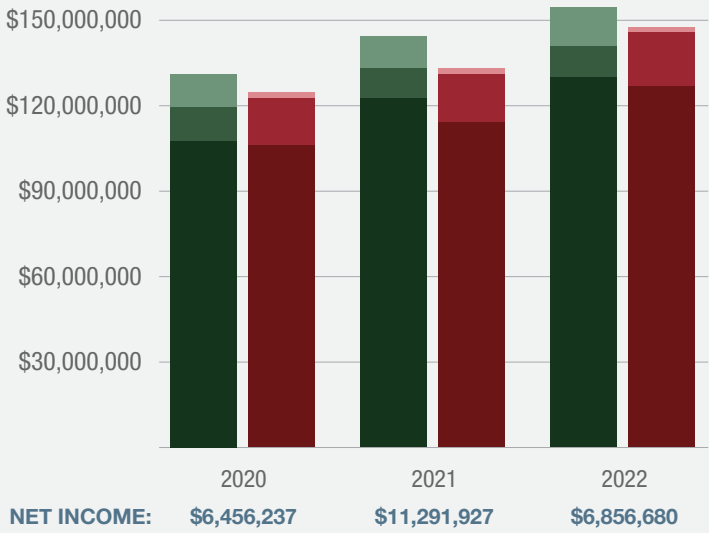

He was always gentlemanly, if occasionally brusque, but his questions were tough and basic.

The Kerns were pillars of their community, employers of exceptionally loyal and able staffers—but did they ever have to perform!—and leaders of a classic, nay paradigmatic, “family foundation.” It wasn't just named for them. It embodied and extended their family values, and we have absolutely no doubt that it will continue to.

FOR SUCH A TIME AS THIS

JAMES C. RAHN

The Jubilee Centre's 10th Anniversary Conference | Oriel College, Oxford
Remarks Delivered 8 September 2022

“If you are only working to solve problems you can accomplish in your lifetime, you are solving problems that are too small!” This is among the wise sayings of Mr. Robert Kern for whom I have had the privilege of working over the past fifteen years. My Kern Family Foundation colleagues and I have accepted that challenge, and we are committed to deploying the Foundation's assets toward addressing significant cultural challenges related to the Kern family's priorities. To Mr. Kern's quote I will add my own, “Never trust an investment in moral education that doesn't impact your grandchildren.” I would like to talk about that challenge this evening.

I have five grandchildren. Their names are Ian, Evan, Julian, Nora, and Lois. When I think of my grandchildren, it is not philosophical abstractions of neo-Aristotelian moral frameworks that motivate me. Rather it is the faces of my five grandchildren. This summer my wife and I took Ian and Evan, ages 9 and 7, to the Black Hills of South Dakota. It was 10 days of intense cross-generational bonding. Their faces animate my thoughts this evening.

Can my lifework create a moral ecology that will positively influence their lives? Here is the challenge I put before you this evening:

What if the successes of our professional careers in character education were measured by the moral formation of our grandchildren?

Are we creating the climate for sufficient moral formation in families, schools, professions, and society to influence them? Are we making a difference in the moral ecology of our nations? These questions haunt me. While we celebrate our past success tonight, the challenges before us are mounting and demand a focused urgency and scrutiny. What are our professional priorities for such a time as this, if such a generational vision animates our collective mission?

This is indeed a time of celebration for the enormous accomplishments of James Arthur and the Jubilee Centre. When the Kern Family Foundation was first introduced to the Jubilee Framework for Character Education and the Jubilee team, we did a full stop...and subsequent pivot in our investments in character. James has over the past decade catalyzed an international network of thought leaders around the concept of character formation and moral development. He has invigorated an academic discussion on a framework of virtues designed to foster the flourishing of individuals and society. Collectively, we owe a tremendous debt of gratitude to James, and the entire Jubilee Centre team, as well as to the John Templeton Foundation leadership for their philanthropic vision and investment. The Kern Family Foundation is honored to have played a small role in this academic beachhead in moral education.

However, lasting moral formation is measured in generations not decades—in the ability of one generation to pass on its moral ecology to the next. In this there is much more to be done, and it is something that we are going to have to do together.

Beyond the academy, our work in the moral reformation of society has barely begun. As a sunset foundation, the urgency of time is woven into the DNA of the Kern Family Foundation. Our Foundation will sunset in 2035; thus, we have but thirteen years to determine sustainable, scalable strategies; build strong partnerships; and foster dense networks and a network of networks capable of lasting social change. What are we doing that will significantly influence our grandchildren? There are lessons we can learn from the history that surrounds us here at Oxford University.

Located in the foyer of St. John's College Chapel is the statue of William Wilberforce, the celebrated historic political and social reformer. He is known for his efforts in the abolition of slavery, but this was only one of his two life goals. He wrote in his Journal, “God Almighty has set before me two Great Objects: the suppression of the Slave Trade and the Reformation of Manners.” His second great object parallels what concerns us this evening.

The late 18th and early 19th century world of Wilberforce was a harsh world. The everyday conditions of work, social services, medicine, education, criminal justice, animal care, and, yes, slavery, lacked a collective vision of empathy for the other. It was grotesquely brutish by all contemporary standards. However, what was still in place was a residual Victorian morality to which Wilberforce and his friends in the Clapham Sect regularly appealed. Over the course of the 30 years when the group was active, they became the best model we have for turning around a society and culture. They remain in many circles the paragon example of an effective, dense network for social change.

As significant as Wilberforce was to this effort, it was the diverse collaboration of the members of the Clapham Circle that made the difference. The main actor on the stage of lasting cultural change is not the heroic individual but the dense network. Historian John Pollock observed, “Wilberforce's life is proof that a man can change his times, though he cannot do it alone.” Likewise, historian Niall Ferguson observes “Often the biggest changes in history are the achievements of thinly documented, informally organized groups of people.” There are numerous historical examples of dense networks making significant changes in society to the point of redefining reality: the rise of Christianity, the abolition of slavery, the rise of Russian communism, Jewish admission to elite universities, the Civil Rights Movement, and the Gay Equality movement, among others. In short, dense networks are the way things get done in society. Are those of us in this room a sufficiently dense network to make a lasting difference?

Over the course of the past decade, the Jubilee Centre has curated a nascent network of likeminded scholars and practitioners. It is now time intentionally to thicken the density of this network: both relationally and toward a common vision of moral formation. This tacit network must be galvanized consciously around a compelling vision. Wilberforce was not shy about articulating visions sufficiently robust that they could not be achieved alone or quickly. We need a robust cause that will galvanize and unify our diverse network of networks to making a lasting generational difference. We need a vision that demands ongoing strategic collaboration. And we need catalytic leaders ready to serve a collaborative vision that is larger than their own institution's mission. To achieve the kind of moral ecology that will influence our grandchildren, it will take a greater degree of self-conscious network building joined with a leadership commitment focused on sustained collaboration.

For all the success of the Clapham Circle in achieving the abolition of slavery in 1833, and for all the particular social reform efforts they accomplished toward the reformation of manners in the 19th century, they largely failed in passing on their moral vision and standards to their grandchildren. Their story is a cautionary tale. The grandchildren of the Clapham Sect were the recognized leaders of the Bloomsbury group. They went from morality to amorality. In three generations they went from being the paragons of evangelical social reform to the transgressive champions and critics of everything the Clapham Sect stood for. “Bloomsbury,” historian Gertrude Himmelfarb writes, “was as much a group as Clapham was a ‘sect.’ And it performed something of the same function, setting the tone and agenda for the cultural ‘vanguard’ of the nation.” Here the parallels end as they stood for opposite ethical agendas: one for moral and spiritual reformation and the other for moral and spiritual liberation.

How does one get from Clapham to Bloomsbury?

By car it is a journey of about ten kilometers that would take about 27 minutes. Culturally it took three generations for the moral and spiritual transformation to take root. It is about our grandchildren. Are our efforts in moral reform sufficient to shape the moral ecology of their world, three generations out?

Many thought leaders on morality have observed that we live in a cultural climate where the social expectations have moved from “We” to “I.” Long term this will be our civilizational undoing. The late Rabbi Jonathan Sacks warns, “If we care for the future of democracy, we must recover that sense of shared morality that binds us to one another in the bond of mutual compassion and care. There is not liberty without morality, no freedom without responsibility, no viable ‘I’ without the sustainable ‘We.’” The reformation of manners is a pressing priority in our own day.

In the United States we have experienced over the past months an epidemic of mass shootings. In this America is exceptional. There is public outcry, political handwringing, and pundit outrage. Blame is placed on a wide array of suspects: guns, mental health, NRA, Republicans, parents, media, and entertainment. Almost never is blame placed on the moral ethos in which these young male perpetrators have been raised—a moral ethos grounded in expressive individualism, social fragmentation, mental depression, inflammatory rhetoric, normalization of violence, and daily drug use. Modern young people are growing up in world without familial stability, uncertain economic prospects, delegitimate public institutions, and a normalization of pop moral nihilism. The results of this moral ecology are not surprising.

One is reminded of British poet Edwin Brock's observation in Five Ways to Kill a Man: all it takes to kill a man is to have him grow up in the South Side of Chicago in the 21st century. The moral ethos of his surroundings will get him in time. Brock wrote,

In an age of aeroplanes, you may fly miles above your victim and dispose of him by pressing one small switch.
All you then require is an ocean to separate you, two systems of government, a nation's scientists, several factories, a psychopath and land that no one needs for several years.

These are, as I began, cumbersome ways to kill a man. Simpler, direct, and much more neat is to see that he is living somewhere in the middle of the 21st century and leave him there.

In England, the moral shift came in the Edwardian era, a period highlighted recently by the television series Downton Abbey. Here the trappings of being a gentleman took precedence over the reasons for being a gentleman. The “why” questions were abandoned for the “what” questions. Faith, religion, and metaphysics played almost no part in the rationale of moral life, except as a casual social ritual. The English of the Edwardian era retained a morality that was shaped by religion, without any strict adherence to or conviction of religion. It was a morality without metaphysics. Theirs were values without transcendence, virtue without objectivity, classical appeal without contemporary relevance, and a morality built on philosophical bald tires that lack practical traction under pressure, lacking what sociologists speak of as “binding address.” Our movement is in danger of the same tendency.

What history demonstrates is that a cut flower morality dies in the third generation. As a network, we must stand against the naivete of a cut flower moral framework. We must take to heart the warning of sociologist James Davison Hunter, “We want character but without unyielding convictions, we want strong morality but without the emotional burdens of guilt or shame, we want virtue but without particular moral justifications that invariably offend; we want good without having to name evil; we want decency without the authority to insist upon it; we want moral community without any limitations to personal freedom. In short, we want what we cannot possibly have on the terms that we want it.” Such thin-gruel morality is not sufficient to the moral task of our moment.

The Clapham reformers failed to address the intellectual currents that were undermining the basis of the moral convictions and faith of their children. They were animated by an evangelical missionary zeal, a pragmatic bias, and an anti-intellectual pietism. They failed to address the encroaching scientism, biblical higher criticism, progressive rationalism, Philistine anti-aesthetic biases, emotional upheaval of the loss of faith, and communal disruptions that shaped the world in which their children were being raised. That the tide of faith was receding, its social plausibility collapsing, and doubts loomed large were all ignored. They continued to champion the what without ever addressing the why. Their cut flower morality inevitably morphed in three generations into the amorality of the Bloomsbury group. Morality without a metaphysical justification is a morality that will evaporate under the hot noon sun.

Novelist Flannery O’Connor decreed that you must “push back against the age as hard as it pushes against you.” Discussing the metaphysical basis for morality is politically incorrect in many academic circles today. But if we do not have the courage to debate the deep sources of moral virtues, who will? Is it easier to applaud an ancient taxonomy of virtues in a vacuum? To speak in vague civic generalities without challenging the epistemic basis of expressive individualism and the fact/value dualism that dominates our age and is assumed by most of our educational institutions? History suggests that avoiding these sensitive subjects will not be enough to sustain a binding address in the moral convictions of our grandchildren.

We are raising a generation within a post-Christian Nietzschean world—where the horizon has been wiped away, the stabilizing rituals of family and religion are largely abandoned, where the basics of meaning have evaporated, and the logic of suicide personally omnipresent. Today we are starting from within the assumptions of Bloomsbury. In this world, a bald-tire morality that does not address its moral justification is not enough. We must address the insufficiency of the autonomous self, the inadequacy of subjective values, the limitations of individualism, the insufficiency of mutual consent as moral justification, and the falsehood of morality unmoored from metaphysics. Such efforts demand academic courage, robust civil debate, and comprehensive strategies for shifting the moral tide among our culture-shaping institutions.

The Kern Family Foundation has a ticking clock. Like the aging Dowager Countess of Grantham in Downton Abbey, we have earned the right to be straightforward. At Kern, we are all in on character education and moral reform in all our social institutions. But for morality to have ethical traction among our grandchildren, we must have the courage to ask “why.” We may differ on our ultimate answers, but we must not allow academic threats, English politeness, or religious biases keep us from a robust debate on the sources of the virtues we seek in our institutions, society, and yes, our grandchildren. The successes of our careers in this space are going to be measured by the moral arc of their lives.

We may celebrate our accomplishment in inaugurating a sustained conversation about character education and moral formation. We may applaud the research we have conducted on what constitutes human flourishing. We must now consciously create dense networks and a network of networks around a cause that deepens our conversations about the justification of moral formation. We must have the courage to start with “why.”

This will take us into domains where personal vulnerability is required, academic courage needed, and sustained debate welcomed. Our task is to give the coming generations a moral framework that is more than just a cut flower or thin gruel. In their world the basis for morality has been abandoned for some time. Platitudes and taxonomies are not going to be sufficiently convincing. We need the collective courage to say what is moral and why. This is the generational task for such a time as this.

Mr. Kern is correct, “If you are only working to solve problems you can accomplish in your lifetime, you are solving problems that are too small.”

Ian, Evan, Julian, Norah, Lois – and all of your grandchildren – are counting on us!

“We need the collective courage to say what is moral and why. This is the generational task for such a time as this.”
